

as the worlds
turn

A vintage globe collection creates a decorative axis for this pristinely modern take on city dining. A restaurant supply company custom-made the table, and the chairs are reproduction Jacobson. (Fresh-cut grass in the centerpiece tray makes a witty allusion to distant country lawns.)

really neat

This might well be considered an homage to the architect Le Corbusier, a man who believed in the geometry of everyday objects as well as the impact of strong saturated color. The couch is his. The specific shade of the blue Barcelona chairs, however, was chosen based on the owner's childhood associations with her first Barbie car. Pride of place also goes to the meticulous arrangement of black-and-white photographs.
